Re: Summing Up Last Week Macromedia Acquisition

Last week was an exciting time for Adobe as we announced our plans to acquire Macromedia. We spent the majority of the week speaking with employees, customers, partners, investors, analysts and press, and we're pleased to report that all have been very supportive of our vision to bring the companies together.

Our energy and excitement about the future continues to grow each day. And, we've heard from many of you that you share the same feeling. Many of you have asked, "How can I help?" You can help in two important ways:

First, stay focused on our business we must continue to operate independent of Macromedia until the close of the transaction. Our future success as a combined company is critically dependent upon how successful each company is in executing its own business strategy. Both Adobe and Macromedia have been very successful in the recent past. This is why many external parties see the logic of this deal and believe in our ability to successfully integrate the two companies. We need to continue our trend of success.

Second, be supportive of the integration process. Deals of this nature can take several months or longer to close, and due to its size and scope, this acquisition will require a very tightly controlled integration process. The Integration Program Office, under the leadership of Jim Briody, is forming with the functional integration leads currently being selected by the ETeam. Look for email updates from the Integration Program Office in the next couple of weeks describing the integration process, structure, and the initial integration team members. Additionally, the Integration Program Office will send out periodic email updates on the integration planning.

We have a great year ahead with tremendous opportunity. Let's work together to ensure our future success by executing flawlessly on our business today!
