Stuart Varney, Anchor:

The New York Stock Exchange getting taken over ICE is buying NYSE Euronext for more than $8 billion. Here's what we want to know: Will those floor traders still be there, or will we go completely to computers? Charlie Gasparino on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange with Duncan Neiderauer.

Go, Charlie.

Charlie Gasparino, Reporter:

Not just Duncan Neiderauer, Jeff Sprecher did I say the name right?

Jeff Sprecher, Founder and Chief Executive Officer, Intercontinental Exchange:

Sprecher.

Gasparino:

Okay. I just want to get this cleared up: The Mayans are predicting the end of the world at the end of December and the New York Stock Exchange sells to the Intercontinental Exchange. Is there any connection here?

Duncan Niederauer, Chief Executive Officer and Director, NYSE Euronext:

If the world ends tomorrow, I guess that's an execution risk we had not factored into the consummation of our deal. So let's hope the Mayans are wrong.

Gasparino:

Seriously, guys, I think it's an amazing deal, a 200-year-old institution essentially being taken over by a 20-year institution. How does that happen?

Sprecher:

12 year.

Gasparino:

12.

[Laughter]

Sprecher:

You overstate my age. Well, you know what's interesting is the New York Stock Exchange is a network; it's obviously a network that started 200 years ago. But today, you could start a network and you and I have been a part of watching networks create organically quickly, and that's what technology has done, that's what Facebook is, that's what Amazon is, that's what eBay is. And so, my company created a network that grew very, very quickly, that is very complementary to the network that 200 years ago some guys under a tree decided on.

Gasparino:

Which is? Stocks traded here, you guys, essentially, a black box that trades commodities, right?

Sprecher:

It isn't black.

[Laughter]

Gasparino:

A very gray box.

Sprecher:

A gray box.

Gasparino:

Let me ask you this, Duncan and this is what I've heard how this deal materialized. Last year, you actually tried to take over the New York Stock Exchange.

Niederauer:

I did.

Gasparino:

And he doesn't hold that against you, and you don't hold that against him.

Sprecher:

No.

Gasparino:

It's just business. As Michael Corleone says, it's just business.

Sprecher:

That's a great attribute.

Gasparino:

But here's what I heard: at that point, there's an analyst, Richard Repetto, brilliant guy from Sandler O'Neill, he came to you and said, "Why don't you do a deal?" Or he talked about a deal and you said, "I would do a deal but Duncan won't give up CEO." And then Rich went to you and said, "Is that true?" and you said you would do a deal that was better for the shareholders.

Niederauer:

I don't know where you get your information, Charlie, but...

Gasparino:

That sounds like a confirmation.

Niederauer:

Was this another of these times when you were the guest bartender somewhere or something? So, we've known each other for a while, business is business. Jeff approached me this year, we'd already cleaned the slate.

Gasparino:

How long ago?

Niederauer:

I don't know several weeks ago, it hasn't been that long. We did this pretty quickly.

Gasparino:

Really, several weeks ago?

Niederauer:

We did this pretty quickly. And our view is, the time was right for both of us, let's see if we can get this done. He's the best CEO in the exchange industry in my view, but I'm happy to be a president of the company alongside Jeff as the CEO. The teams have already been working great together. It's about shareholder value. If you see an opportunity to transform the company like I thought we did here and change the trajectory of the company and to combine with someone who we always thought was a great team to combine with and you've got a great leader of the other organization, I promise you there's no controversy here, we literally didn't talk about it because it was obvious Jeff should be the CEO and I'm happy to stay as a president.

Gasparino:

Okay. Obvious question everybody's going to ask: you see the floor, there are people still here, you're an electronic guy, will there still be floor traders?

Sprecher:

Absolutely, because what these people did here is they prevented flash crashes, they are here at times of emergency. I mean, it's been interesting. I was one of hundreds of people on the telephone when Hurricane Sandy was coming through and we were all asking, what should we do, how should the markets work? And you know what? Everybody turned to Duncan and asked Duncan, what are we going to do? In times of stress, this economy turns to the New York Stock Exchange. And to the people that are here, there is a reason that there's an American flag wrapped around the front of this building. There is a reason that there are hundreds of tourists out in front of us today.

Gasparino:

So let's just get this straight: you are committed to the floor traders, to keeping them here?

Sprecher:

Absolutely, in this building, with this name.

Niederauer:

My role in the company is going to be more focused on this, I'll be less spread out, because Jeff has a more than capable derivatives team to take care of that piece of it. There will be discussions, I'm sure, about the European exchange assets and if the policymakers in Europe would like to have them back. I think we opened the door yesterday to say that's their call, so that gives me the opportunity to be more focused on the brand and the U.S. assets, which include this floor.

Gasparino:

Now, Duncan, I kind of know you a little bit now, you've been kind of itching to do something else, I believe. Is this your exit strategy?

Niederauer:

No. There's no I mean, it's about shareholder value creation, and our parents did teach us, if you try something that you thought was a good idea and you failed, that doesn't mean you give up.

Gasparino:

How long are you going to be here?

Niederauer:

I've committed to stay at least through the end of 2014, and if we're liking working together it'll be longer. He's not rushing me to the exit, just to be clear and I'm not looking for one.

Gasparino:

A little bit of a hook, but I want to ask you this: You've been a guy that created tremendous shareholder value, kind of behind-the-scenes headquarters here or in Atlanta?

Sprecher:

We're going to be in both places and I'm going to continue to be behind-the-scenes.

Gasparino:

So you're not going to be the public he's still the public face? I want to get this straight Duncan Neiderauer?

Sprecher:

I sure hope so, because I'm not a particularly good face and he's great at it.

Niederauer:

I think what Jeff and I both agree on and we're not going to get into what the name of the new company is going to be the NYSE brand, which I feel has been an unbelievable platform for us to do great things for and with our customers, I'm happy to continue to be the face of that brand and I'm happy to be his deputy in the new company. This is a no-brainer.

Gasparino:

Before I wrap this up

Niederauer:

I thought they were giving you the hook?

Gasparino:

No. I'm good like that. You can't get rid of the NYSE in any name, can you?

Sprecher:

No. I think it's actually inscribed on the front of the building in limestone. [Laughs]

Gasparino:

Will it be the NYSE in your name?

Sprecher:

I don't know what the group will be called. we haven't talked about it yet.

Niederauer:

You have the NYSE brand, you have the ICE brand, you have the Euronext brand right now all we're committing to is all the brands are going to survive but we're not going to get into the name game. Everyone should just have a nice holiday and we'll talk about it next year.

Sprecher:

By the way, Charlie, between us now, we're going to be operating 14 global exchanges in five clearinghouses. We have quite a footprint.

Gasparino:

Are you glad that ?

Niederauer:

Well, we were saying that last night on the way back from London that if ICE got their LME deal done and we got our Deutsche Boerse deal done, we wouldn't be having the pleasure of your company.

Gasparino:

And you're glad the NASDAQ hostile takeover?

Sprecher:

Yeah, I mean, I no. At the time I did that deal, I wanted to do that deal.

Niederauer:

You're asking him who his preferred partner would be, he has no comment.

[Laughter]

Sprecher:

But I have aspirations.

Gasparino:

We'll leave that to another interview, guys. Thanks, Jeff Sprecher, Duncan Niederauer.
